The effect of insulin on bovine aortic endothelial cells (BAECs) was assessed. Treatment of BAECs in vitro with 5 mg/L insulin for 4 days decreased their rate of proliferation by approximately 25% compared to controls. Confluent BAEC cultures were exposed to different concentrations of insulin (1, 5, 10 mg/L) for 4 days. The insulin effect on BAEC proliferation was dose dependent, with a threshold of 5 mg/L. The effect of insulin was reversible upon removal of the hormone. Insulin could induce phenotypic changes in BAECs by decreasing the expression of the cell-cell adhesion molecule VE-cadherin. Northern blot analyses revealed that insulin (
