FIFA has a long history of pushing the human limits of video game football. The most recent incarnation of that challenge is FIFA 20, which was renowned for its almost surreal level of realism. But this year, EA Sports will be moving in a new direction. FIFA 22 introduces what's called "HyperMotion Technology." It uses a combination of motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. As with previous versions, the data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power gameplay. I asked FIFA gameplay director Robert Sampson about how HyperMotion Technology is different from previous iterations of the franchise. "It's a bit like how the movies and TV series use CG - they capture things and manipulate what we've captured in CG, but it's still just the gameplay," he said. Sampson went on to point out that the game's biggest change in year two of the series is the introduction of all new animations for the CPU. The past would be difficult, and mostly fun. The future is the future, and the future is stuff. The past would be difficult, and mostly fun. The future is the future, and the future is stuff. Sampson also said that for FIFA 20, there were eight other main gameplay systems with the obvious feature being the artificial intelligence. This year, there will be 10 main systems, including the returning Player Intelligence. FIFA 22 will also include the return of a franchise staple: the Adidas Predator Isospeed boot. The new adidas Predator Isospeed boot will be released alongside FIFA 22 on August 4, 2017. A new boot will also be released for the new all-new Nike boot (more details to come) The new boot design will include a redesigned toe and increased heel thickness. The previous Isospeed boot lasted a little less than a decade, but its fanbase remains loyal, along with being a highly sought-after rare model. In addition, it appears the boot is bigger, thanks to bigger fitting for the new extra large foot dimensions. The boot will come with a boot lacing system that allows you to adjust your tightness, based on your foot size and your preferred playing style. It'll also come with a straighter out
