"I'm incredibly proud of FIFA 22, which introduces 'HyperMotion Technology', a revolutionary feature that uses motion capture data to more accurately analyse and model player behaviours," said William Chyr. "This technique is world-first, and represents a true breakthrough in the way players and teams are modelled in FIFA. By being able to capture the way that players move dynamically in real life, I can create a more accurate representation of players in the game. 'HyperMotion Technology' also provides a number of benefits to players in the form of improved accuracy in shooting, dribbling and passing, as well as improved ball physics. As with previous versions of FIFA, 'HyperMotion Technology' allows players to pick and choose from customisable Player Vision settings. Adding eye tracking technology, players can also now see how players close to them in front of them are moving and shifting their weight. By intelligently estimating the number of players and closing in on a player, you will be able to more accurately create the right look-to's and passes, which affect the way players move in a crowd. With eight new leagues to choose from, including the Professional Licence International, and 20 new stadiums, which offers unprecedented camera angles, combined with the new 'Artificial Intelligence' systems, playing online will be more enjoyable than ever. And if online multiplayer is more your thing, there's a "New Online Invite-only Squad Battles", which is sure to satisfy your competitive side. In addition to the new gameplay features, there are numerous improvements and additions made to the FIFA Ultimate Team Builder. Players on the PS4 will be able to work towards unlocking goals and achievements using new TOTW features, so players can now rank and score their players and shares in the TOTW. The new 'MLS Player Ratings' now gives players ratings across multiple key categories, including shooting, dribbling, positioning, passing and defensive, which will be delivered on a consistent basis. In addition to 'MLS Player Ratings,' TOTW rewards for 'FUT' rewards have been added which could include real-world player prizes from the latest FIFA Ultimate Team kits. Furthermore, new FUT rewards including Rivals, Player Cards and Certificates, are added on a weekly basis. FIFA 22 is available on PlayStation 4 from October 2.
