But Honnolds the-climber-thats-whats-a-climber strategy is flawed. Simply put, climbing is a sport - climbing is performance, and there are many sports in which athletes aren't judged solely on their accomplishments at the highest levels of competition. You can be great in a sport and still lose your spot on the national team. Not only that, but you don't just climb because you love the sport. You climb because you love how much you get from it. Your body, your mind, your soul - they all come alive as you climb. Think about how good it would be to have given up something you love so that you can climb to the fullest, but if that were the only reason you climbed, you could be unhappy. So you are climbing because the activity makes you happy. To put it bluntly, its what life is about. Honnold has been climbing for 15 years - and it is apparent why he loves it. He is addicted to the heart-pounding, mind-expanding experience of climbing. if youre looking for a movie to watch while youre at home, youre in luck. netflix has nearly every movie and tv show that you could possibly think of. but beware: while many of their titles are available for free, others are not. netflix charges $7.99 a month for unlimited access to their library. the first question everyone wants to know about the next big thing is, where do you get it? and once youve got it, how do you watch it? with itunes, getting a movie is as easy as getting a song. start at the movies section. browse the hundreds of titles and narrow your choices down by genre or rating. once youve picked a movie, youll find the option to buy or rent it, and you can watch it as many times as you like for as long as you like.
